This review aimed to update the information on the effect of postmenopausal hormone replacement therapy (HRT) on cognition and blood markers of vascular disease, to evaluate the risk of cardiovascular events due to HRT use and to discuss the need for brain imaging in these patients. A comprehensive search of the literature was conducted using various databases to identify studies that evaluated the effects of HRT on brain atrophy and blood markers of vascular disease in cognitively healthy postmenopausal women. Available guidelines on the use of HRT in the elderly were analyzed and contrasted with the most recent data available from randomized controlled trials (RCTs). The lack of adequate data on the effects of H

Conseguindo uma versao carregada de CCS Pic PCWHD.Q: C-Programm, modifying the value of the variable, but can't change the value of the array I was trying to make an easy programm which'sends' some stuff of my desktop to my Android phone. I used the fwrite/fread to send the data in byte format. Here is my code: #include #include int main(void) { int t; int size = 64 * 1024; int len; int total = 0; char device[16] = "/dev/sdcard"; FILE *fp; fopen_s(&fp, device, "r"); while ((len = fread(&t, 1, 1, fp))!= 0) { total += t; } printf("total: %d", total); t = total / size; printf("t: %d", t); return 0; } My output when I run the programm is something like this: [terminate called after throwing an instance of 'std::logic_error' what(): basic_string::_S_construct null not valid] What am I doing wrong? A: You have to allocate memory for t (which will be a double, with 64 bits of mantissa) and assign it the proper value. You also should not assume size will be an exact multiple of the byte in an array of integers. You could use proper memory management: #include #include #include int main(void) { int t; int size = 1024; int len; int total = 0; char device[16
